Horticulturists putting the finishing touches to the permanent Carbon Garden which has opened today at Kew Gardens, the biggest new development since 2019

The Carbon Garden brings to life the critical role carbon plays in sustaining all life on Earth and communicates the scale of the climate crisis

Over 6,500 plants

Central Pavilion inspired by plants and fungi, created using natural materials

The garden presents solutions people can apply in their own green spaces and shares the extraordinary potential of plants and fungi to combat the climate crisis
