A photographer has released a stunning series of photos that show the raw beauty of the Scottish Highlands.

Scotland-based photographer Camillo Berenos has spent the past few years travelling through the highlands, capturing breath-taking pictures along the way.

Camillo said: "Unlike many who undertake such projects, I haven't focused on a single defined geographical area, though the majority of my photographic forays have taken me to the Western and North-Western Highlands.

"From the vast but also familiar landscapes of Rannoch Moor and Glen Coe, to the relentlessly steep slopes of the hills in Kintail and the rugged and shapely mountain massifs of Torridon and Wester Ross, I have spent many hours in the hills, with specific destinations often primarily being determined by where the weather forecast looked most favourable."
