He's conquered the worlds of fashion and interiors, now Jasper Conran has opened a luxury riad in Marrakech. His riad is a cathedral to good taste, a converted 19th-century palace called L'Hotel Marrakech. Five suites of four-posters swathed in a total of nearly a mile of white voile along with baths of trough-shaped tadelakt plaster are all set around a quadrangle of orange trees and a pretty tiled fountain. The place radiates the sort of Thirties decadence once found in Tangiers. This is in part because of the private-house feel, but also the simple elegance, the pinks and greens, the oil paintings of maharajas as well as Conran's insistence that you can drink rose? for breakfast if you feel so inclined or smoke by the fire in the bar while listening to Duke Ellington on a hidden radio.
