A snore-detecting bed loaded with high-tech features may make you want to stay under the sheets all day. The Italian designed and built HiCan looks like an update on the classic, romantic four-poster. But inside the grand-king sized bed which is 2.3 metres wide, comes with a home theatre system, Marantz receiver, sub-woofer for deep bass, 4K HD video projector plus sensors for presence, weight, temperature, humidity, air quality, noise level and brightness. The video screen rolls down at the foot of the bed. There is also on-invasive measurement of heartbeat and respiratory rate with an historical log. It remembers a user's favourite positions and can be pre-set for relaxing, reading, sleep. A smart alarm ensures users get y refreshed by waking them during the lightest suitable sleep stage. It allows owners to control just about anything using an intuitive multiplatform app. They can close privacy blinds, change position, watch a movie, listen to favourite play list, or turn off the lights. It detects when someone is snoring and start to move the head up a little to free the airways and return to silent sleep. The smart bed also can be integrated with your existing home automation system. The basic bed starts at €36.000 Euros.
