

FEATURE - Riesige Vogelschwärme in Norfolk, UK

Reference

DUK10135960_006

Title

FEATURE - Riesige Vogelschwärme in Norfolk, UK

Creation date

20200821

Caption

A photographer has captured jaw-dropping pictures of birds in Norfolk – including a flock shaped like a BIRD.

At this time of year photographer and guide Paul Goldstein would normally be photographing big cats in Kenya. Unfortunately, due to what he terms as 'one-size-fits-all' travel advice he cannot. Therefore, Norfolk has been his patch and particularly the Snettisham bird spectacular on the North coast of the county.

"I would stop to photograph this anywhere in the world," the photographer says as he watches thousands of knots, dunlins, redshanks and oystercatchers perform their acrobatics forming mysterious patterns above the tidal flats. "Sometimes they look like a whole weather front coming in and they get really lively if a raptor like a harrier or particularly a peregrine falcon joins them."

"The recent spring tides have been a bonus as the flocks are pushed onto the small islands in the nearby lagoon, where they congregate in vast numbers but in seemingly strict order."

"This is a worthy RSPB flagship venue, well managed and a lifesaver for many wilderness fans this summer."

Paul is a photographer and guide who normally guides in Kenya, Alaska, Canada, Antarctica, Namibia and Brazil.

Where: Snettisham, Norfolk, United Kingdom

When: 21 Aug 2020

Credit: Paul Goldstein/Cover Images (FOTO: DUKAS/COVER IMAGES)

Special instructions

(c) Dukas

City

Snettisham

Credit

DUKAS

Source

COVER IMAGES

Author

Original references

coverimg40818650