March 25, 2024 - Buenos Aires, Argentina: A woman walks past a graffiti in Montserrat, one of Buenos Aires' oldest neighborhoods, featuring the message 'Que te bien estai no dula,' which roughly translates to 'You're doing great, don't doubt it.' A casual, encouraging note in the vibrant street art style In the last government's Argentina, inequalities widened drastically due to severe cuts and austerity measures, to the point where even the International Monetary Fund (IMF) might be envious. The percentage of the population living at or below the poverty line rose to 57.4%, about 27 million citizens. The primary cause of this deterioration in living standards was the government's decision to devalue the peso, which, alongside other measures, deprived much of society of the ability to access basic goods. Public spending has been reduced by about a third, particularly in the areas of health, social security, and education. In the heart of Buenos Aires, hardship, poverty, exhaustion and despair are etched in the faces of ordinary people. (Maro Kouri/ Polaris) (FOTO:DUKAS/POLARIS)
