Parisians and tourists cool off at the Trocadero fountain in Paris, France, on July 1, 2025, as temperatures in France are expected to hit a peak today, according to the Meteo France weather agency, with some areas expected to soar beyond 40 degrees Celsius (104 degrees Fahrenheit). Paris braces for blistering temperatures, with the French capital on red alert as an early summer heatwave spreads into parts of northern Europe less accustomed to such extremes. Scientists say human-induced climate change makes such heatwave events more intense, frequent, and widespread. (Photo by Jerome Gilles/NurPhoto)
