Caption

Best for Britain CEO Eloise Todd at her Covent Garden offices. Walk into the Best for Britain offices in Covent Garden and you are greeted by artwork that likens Theresa May's premiership to the Titanic. The message is hardly subtle. But for the anti-Brexit campaign group, time is running out. "We have six months to make the decisive difference," CEO Eloise Todd tells me matter-of-factly. Best for Britain is open about its aim to "stop Brexit democratically" - and has recently announced plans to take Brexit Secretary David Davis to court in a bid to force a second referendum on the terms of Britain's departure from the EU.
