A 2,000km road and river odyssey in Brazil reveals consensus from all sides: Bolsonaro has ushered in a new age of wrecking. Humaitá, Amazonas, Brazil, September 3, 2019: Rui Souza, the owner of waterside petrol station in Humaitá that sells to goldseekers, said he was also optimistic Bolsonaro would do away with environmental and indigenous reserves so they could be commercially exploited. "Our Amazonia is so rich, my friend. But we're not allowed to use any of it," the 65-year-old complained.
