" Modern methods must always be used in the manufacture of foodstuffs " is the maxim of the 1958 British Food Fair, except it seems in the case of Christmas puddings, which should be 'traditional'. In an attempt to re-popularise the old fashioned 'plum pudding' of two centuries ago, the organisers of the Fair are sending out 200 of these puddings to members of the British press. These puddings are round in shape and cooked without a basin. Photograph shows: Miss M Eggs of Barnes seen with an old fashioned 'plum pudding', with another one wrapped beside her, like those which are being distributed by organisers of the British Food Fair.
